Sublime Hairdressing, located in Stirling city centre, is owned by entrepreneur Sarah Turnbull. Sublime provides services such as colouring, cutting and extensions and sells a range of hair products such as shampoos and styling products.

Its client base is currently predominantly female. However, market research shows that men often prefer a barber, therefore Sublime has recently employed one. There are 7 stylists who are paid based on a time-rate system, and they also receive commission on sales of haircare products. Staff have a statutory holiday entitlement, with flexibility as to when holidays are taken.

The external environment is constantly changing therefore market research is on-going. Staff are encouraged to be aware of trends and new technology available. This contributed to Sublime introducing Easilocks hair extensions, which use an alternative application method that prevents damage to the hair. It also introduced electronic funds transfer at point of sale (EFTPOS) which allows customers to pay by debit or credit card. Techniques and hair styles constantly change, therefore staff participate in regular training and are encouraged to participate in competitions.

Sarah is considering expanding her business further to include a make-up artist and a beauty therapist. The current shop is in a busy location with ample parking; however, it is small and the rent is high. There are two other salons nearby, although neither includes beauty or make-up services.

The British Army

The British Army protects the United Kingdom’s interests at home and abroad, providing a service to ensure a safe and secure environment in which citizens can live and prosper. The Ministry of Defence is the government department responsible for implementing defence policy and overseeing the British Army.

The British Army engages in duties across many locations to assist with UK government objectives. The work it does ranges from peacekeeping and providing humanitarian aid, to enforcing anti-terrorism measures and helping combat the international drugs trade. Senior officers must work within the constraints of a budget whilst ensuring the Army is as adaptable as possible to respond to threats.

The British Army embraces diversity, creates skills for life and opportunities for all. It views soldiers as one of its most important resources.
